

FALL 2020 Convocation

August 17-21, Colorado State University Pueblo

Life. Changing.
Navigating life in a rapidly changing world.

From the President

Colleagues,

I hope this message finds you and your family members doing well and remaining safe. Like many of you, I spent time this summer trying to make sense of the past six months and thinking about the semester ahead.

We have accomplished much by working together.

We protected our employees and students, as much as possible, from the virus. We continued to operate the university, graduating 601 students during fall and spring, and we graduated another 180 students this summer, including five certificates, 59 Masters, 104 undergraduates, and our first two students of the Doctorate of Nursing Practice. We managed a $20 million budget deficit without laying off employees. And a large cross-functional group of your colleagues invested hundreds of hours this summer preparing for the fall semester.

Providing students with a college education is growing more critical.

As a country, we are struggling to navigate a pandemic. We are anticipating a tumultuous November election. And many citizens are demonstrating in the streets as a way to address racial inequalities. Our country needs citizens who can critically think, lead change, and advocate for others. Our country needs empathic citizens who have the capacity to both understand another person's position while also disagreeing with the person.

We are prepared to have students return to our campus.

In the weeks ahead, we are going to work hard to provide our students with a blended semester where approximately 70% of their courses are offered in a face-to-face manner (or in hybrid format) and another 30% offered online. We are also working to provide students with a much-needed student-life experience where they continue their learning through leadership opportunities and co-curricular programming.

Despite our challenges, I have never been more hopeful about our future.

I have also never felt more inspired than I do now by the work of our students and employees. I look forward to sharing our pathway forward and the inspiration I receive from all of you at our opening meeting.

Best wishes,

Optimism in a Rapidly Changing World

Dear Colleagues,

I want to welcome you back to this new academic year. I find myself optimistic about the future for CSU Pueblo despite all the challenges the world is facing. This optimism is founded in the way we, at CSU Pueblo, have collectively adapted to the storm of changes that we have experienced due to the pandemic. It is strengthened by our resilience and our continued planning and preparation despite the uncertain and sometimes incomplete information.

In the spring 2020 semester, we managed a shift to become an online university on a momentary notice. It was not perfect, but the entire CSU Pueblo community, led by the faculty, kept the focus on the students and their success. We adapted how we taught and interacted with the students. We adjusted academic policies to acknowledge the difficulties the students faced, and we identified needs and provided resources to those who needed them. We should all be proud of what we accomplished.

As it was clear the pandemic will continue to impact us, we continued our adaptation with a summer semester that we offered fully online. The summer saw a remarkable increase in enrollment, reflecting an alignment of our offerings to the student needs and response to innovative policies that supported students' financial needs while promoting engagement in summer learning. Summer witnessed external and internal partnerships aimed at preparing for our new reality in higher education. A partnership with a private company allowed a professional development opportunity for faculty to develop dozens of online courses. Cross-functional teams from all over campus partnered in extensive efforts to reschedule classes under the new restrictions of COVID-19, equip classrooms with technology that adds the flexibility needed for hybrid instruction and students to remotely participate in in-person instruction as circumstances warrant, provide development opportunities for faculty and staff, develop and implement safety guidelines and adopt new policies to ensure safety and compliance of employees and students.

I am appreciative of our faculty, staff, and students who have adapted and continue to adjust to the rapid changes that have been accelerated by the pandemic. Our success, as an institution, is a function of how we continue to value the success of our students, show empathy and understanding towards each other, maintain the flexibility and adaptability needed in the face of uncertainty, and communicate these values clearly to all our students and stakeholders.

Best Regards,
